Designing High-Performance Spaces Throughout Your Office

It's a simple fact that when people succeed, so does their business. So why aren't more offices designed to support the preferred work styles of today's workers? By aligning the various spaces throughout the workplace with the way work gets done, companies are enhancing productivity while giving workers the comfort, function they need to succeed.

PRIVATE

With the changing ways people work, applying a user-centric approach to designing a private office can boost productivity and provide a seamless transition from heads-down focus to relaxed collaborative work.

COLLABORATIVE

As people continue to explore new work styles and spaces, static areas are evolving into multi-functional environments where workers collaborate and hold impromptu meetings. Settings that were once dedicated exclusively to individuals are giving way to areas designated for group work as companies are rethinking and elevating the value of collaboration.

COMMONS

Workers use common areas in a variety of ways throughout the day. This freedom of choice is the result of smart space planning and a variety of lounge furniture, guest seating and tables of all shapes and sizes. Once viewed as purely social, these settings are now approached as legitimate spaces where anyone can relax, refuel and refocus.

OPEN

The days of sitting at a desk from 9-to-5 are over. Now people are craving the freedom to change postures, quickly connect or simply refocus. People thrive when given the ability to transition effortlessly from personal tasks to teamwork.

WELCOMING

Increasing engagement between colleagues and guests has spurred the growth of social spaces that welcome visitors. Well-designed welcoming spaces should be both inviting and comfortable.
